Q2 Did the boys return the horse because they were conscience-stricken or because they were afraid?

Answer. The boys returned the horse because they were conscience-stricken. They really had a good chance to keep the horse for as long as they want. Even after encountering John Byro , the owner of the horse , they were completely in a safe zone because Byro knew their family which was known for their honesty and thus he resisted to believe it was his horse. Seeing his profound faith in their family's name they feel conscience stricken and return the horse the very next day.
