Q.2 Read the passage carefully and answer the following questions-10×1=10

The rapid growth of urbanization has significantly transformed human societies over the past century. Cities have become centers of economic activity, innovation, and cultural exchange, attracting millions of people in search of better opportunities. Urban areas often provide improved access to education, healthcare, transportation, and employment. As a result, they contribute substantially to national economic development.

However, the expansion of cities has also created numerous challenges. The increasing demand for housing and infrastructure has led to the conversion of agricultural land and natural habitats into urban settlements. This process often results in environmental degradation, including air and water pollution, loss of biodiversity, and increased greenhouse gas emissions. Furthermore, rapid population growth in cities can place immense pressure on public services, leading to overcrowding, traffic congestion, and inadequate waste management systems.

Urban planners and policymakers are increasingly emphasizing the concept of sustainable urban development. This approach seeks to balance economic growth with environmental protection and social well-being.
